

Search for in GOAdvanced SearchHome | Journals | Content Collections | Multimedia | Conferences | Information for | Submit a Paper

Violence against women and girls

Published November 21, 2014

Executive summary

Every day, millions of women and girls worldwide experience violence. This abuse takes many forms, including intimate physical and sexual partner violence, female genital mutilation, child and forced marriage, sex trafficking, and rape. The Lancet Series on Violence against women and girls shows that such abuse is preventable. Five papers cover the evidence base for interventions, discuss the vital role of the health sector in care and prevention, show the need for men and women to be involved in effective programmes, provide practical lessons from experience in countries, and present a call for action with five key recommendations and indicators to track progress.

Comment

Prevention of violence against women and girls: a new chapter

Udani Samarasekera, Richard Horton

Full Text | PDF

Patriarchy and violence against women and girls

Jimmy Carter

Full Text | PDF

Research priorities to address violence against women and girls

Marleen Temmerman

Full Text | PDF

Series

Audio

Violence against women and girls

Discussion of the Series with Charlotte Watts and Claudia Garcia-Moreno, and perspectives on violence prevention programmes in Uganda from Tina Musuya.

Download mp3, 17:12 mins, 15.7MB

Related content published in The Lancet journals

Tina Musuya: leading the fight on gender-based violence in Uganda

Richard Lane

Full Text | PDF